9 AUGUST 1956 SOUTH AFRICAN WOMENS' DAY

Heads Desk

In 1996 when Nelson Mandela addressed the nation on Women's Day, he opened his speech by saying; "When the women of South Africa converged on these Union Buildings forty years ago, from every corner of South Africa, they created one of the enduring landmarks of our country's history. They declared that women would insist on their role in making history".

I believe these words still apply today as we celebrate the importance of women in our society. We salute all women who have taken upon themselves to fight for the rights of all women in our country. Women raise the nation in different forms, from child-care, education, senior positions in different career fields, amongst many. We are proud of South African women. It is by such achievements that I call upon every man to respect and honour women and girls amongst us. To the women and girls in our school and families, I say, we love and respect you. Never will we look down upon you. You are our heroines."
